One fact pretty generally conceded by those who are au fait in the matter is, that owing to the general depression of trade in all classes of foreign textiles, silks have, up to the present time been sold at lower prices in the United States than in any other mar-ket in the world outside their place of pro-duction, and are at present being sold in this country for much less than the actual cost of importation. Those low prices will maintain until the present stock shall have entered into general consumption, but as the volume of the importations of last spring and fall disappear, silk manufacturers will demand full prices for fresh orders on their goods, which means an advance of from twenty to thirty-five per cent. In view of these facts, we would say to our patrons: "Buy your spring silks now, while you can still get them at the old price; you will most decidedly save
